Teatulia will always hold a special place in my heart since it was one of the first companies I sampled through Teaviews. A few of those companies, sadly, didn't make it through the recession, but from the looks of it, this one is still going strong, refusing to compromise on their strong focus on social responsibility.

This simply named "White Tea" is available either loose or in pyramid bags, and if I'm reading this correctly, it's cheaper to buy the pyramid bags in a batch of 25 or more rather than 2 ounces looseleaf, so that's different. The leaves are smooth, silver and deep gray in colour. It's interesting to compare them side-by-side with a downy silver needle. They somehow look like they won't be as good as the fuzzier leaf.

But it is good, and it absolutely measures up. After three minutes at 180°, the pale amber liquor smells sweet with hints of citrus, honey, and milk. The flavour is smooth, calming, and subtly vegetal with notes of honey, milk, and citrus. Sweet and slightly citrus with a milky flavour, my 5-minute second steep is solid.

It has an "organic" quality, reminding me of fresh farmers' fields without the haylike taste. Springy and refreshing, it's another great tea from a great company.
